

April 24, 1959

George L. Kline, 'Evaluation of Radio Liberation
(Month of February 1959)'

Citation:

"George L. Kline, 'Evaluation of Radio Liberation (Month of February 1959)"', April 24, 1959, Wilson Center Digital Archive, Released by the Central Intelligence Agency on October 16, 2019, in response to Mandatory Declassification Review request EOM-2018-00930. Contributed by A. Ross Johnson.
<https://wilson-center.drivingcreative.com/document/290919>

Summary:

Professor George Kline reports his evaluation of RL programs for February 1959.&nbsp;

Credits:

This document was made possible with support from Blavatnik Family Foundation

Original Language:

English

Contents:

Original Scan

EVALUATION OF EASTERN LITERATURE SCRIPTS

(Month of February 1959)

26

George L. Kline

In general, the scripts for the month of February are of high quality -- solid, informative, and interesting. They meet the standards set by the RL POLICY MANUAL, with certain exceptions noted below (errors of fact or judgment, lagging in taste, etc.). But two preliminary points should be made: POLICY MANUAL (p. 1b, V, 3) speaks of encouraging Soviet intellectuals to "recognize Soviet reality" by broadcasting "presentations of the best of traditional Russian democratic thought." This seems to be highly important; the democratic individualism and liberalism of such Russian thinkers as Belinsky, Herzen, Lavrov, Nekrasov, Karayev, Chicherin, Turgenev and Millukov is little known to Soviet intellectuals, especially those of the younger generation, and would be eagerly received, if well presented. But nothing from this tradition appears in the February broadcasts.<sup>a</sup>

The station announcement speaks periodically of presenting Western developments in "philosophy, science,..." etc. But in fact, the February broadcasts contain nothing about philosophy to the West. (There is a brief biographical sketch of Fyodor Stepun on the occasion of his 75th birthday, but nothing about his philosophy. E.M. Forster's views of culture are presented briefly, but he is a novelist rather than a philosopher.) I would suggest that a monthly or bi-monthly review of some major Western philosopher's work, or of a new book in philosophy, would be welcomed by Soviet intellectuals -- they have heard the names, and have seen brief and destructive critiques, of the chief contemporary philosophers (including existentialists, pragmatists, positivists, "metaphysicians").

<sup>a</sup> "The dangerous Tolstoy" (17) is only a partial exception.

42/28-02727R/9/1

-2-

but know very little of the actual positions in question.

The terminological points: (In what follows, numbers in parentheses refer to the broadcast date, e.g., "(6)" means "February 6, 1959").

1) In both domestic and foreign press round-ups (2, 6, 8, 9, 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 25) the expression "Soviet zone of Germany" is used to refer to the "German Democratic Republic." (The latter name is occasionally used, always prefaced by "so-called.") I would suggest that the neutral term "East Germany" be used instead; this would be less offensive to Communist ears, more in accord with present practice in the West, and certainly would imply no acceptance or endorsement of the present East German government. Note that in one case (25) the expression "Soviet zone of Germany" is used to refer to an earlier period, to which it accurately applies (1949, in this case).

2) I raise this only as a policy question: In various broadcasts, most consistently in those of RIAS Berlin, "our" is used to mean "Soviet," S.O., "our country," "our citizens," "our newspaper." Perhaps this practice is justified by the resulting sense of identification ~~which~~ with Soviet listeners; but it is sometimes confusing, and may even become ridiculous in some cases -- when the speaker in question is clearly a long-time emigre, disassociated in important respects from everything Soviet. (e.g., Weidlin, 1).

In what follows I shall comment briefly on each major category of M. broadcast for the month of February 1959:

NEWS: Generally good; above average on the 6th, 15th, 18th, and 20th. Once (19) the second newscast was better than the first. For the first few days of February (1-7) the news coverage of the 1st Party Congress largely duplicated what Soviet listeners were reading in Pravda and Izvestiyan exception (?); news includes material not provided by the Soviet press. For the last few days of the month, (28, 29, 25, 26, 27)

It reproduces duplicate considerable material on the Macmillan visit to the USSR available to Soviet listeners from their own newspapers. Exceptions: (25) Pantercurve mentioned as working at Public Atomic Energy; (26) Macmillan speech to Moscow University students was considerably edited in Sov. press, omitting reference to need for greater distribution of contemporary English books inside the Soviet Union, so that the <sup>M</sup>supplied by Dickens' novels could be "brought up to date."

The Cyprus agreements, including its prolonged preliminaries, was well handled in both Newscasts and Foreign Press Round-ups.

Minor errors in News: repetition of text (1, pp. 6-7); Senator Mansfield is called "Leader of the democratic fraction" in the Senate (23). I'm not sure what this is intended to convey, but it seems clearly misleading, if not false. Incidentally, Investiga on Feb. 11 devoted nearly a column and a half to Mansfield's speech on the Berlin question; nothing about this appears in US scripts until the brief report of his later statement on the 23rd. Some background or criticism might have been helpful at the earlier date. -- Lewis Strauss is pronounced "Stros" not "Strange" (22). "Washington" is an error for "Varsova" (17).

Russia press round-up is generally good; exceptions (1), only excerpt from Danish paper really good; remainder adequate. (6, 7,) only adequate; (18, 19, 21, 24) very good.

A general criticism of the procedure of the press round-up: it is not made clear which quoted statements are from editorials (except in a few cases), which from signed columns, which from "news analyses" or regular news stories. Since there is no difference in point of view among those parts of a newspaper in the Soviet press, Soviet listeners may be confused. On several occasions (15, 26, 27) a western newspaper is mentioned as devoting "its editorial" to a particular question; since Soviet newspapers have only one editorial per issue, this may cause RFI's listeners to assume that American and European newspapers follow the same practice. In fact, of course, the New York Times has as many as six or seven editorials in each issue.

-6-

Foreign newspapers are not ordinarily identified as to political position; this might be desirable with respect to such papers as Figaro, l'Avant, and L'Humanité. Apparently only democratic socialist papers are identified (Le Populaire, Avant); but this is misleading. (3, 12) "A socialist newspaper" means to a Soviet listener "a communist newspaper." Perhaps some such phrase as "democratic socialist" or "social-democratic" could be substituted.

FORM OF THE NEWS IN REVIEW: Here I find the quality uneven: the first broadcast (1) is weak at the beginning, duplicate available "Soviet materials," and on the whole makes a rather poor impression. But later broadcasts are better (6, 17); and the "experimental" (?) round-table form of the news of the week (22) is most effective — lively, with humor as well as editorial interest. I would suggest using this regularly.

NEWS NOTES AND ANALYSIS: generally good. I would pick out as especially effective: the analysis of Khrushchev's speech (4), except that the ending is weak; on Syria (6), except that its language is a trifle interpretive; Frank's analysis of Khrushchev's speech to the Moscow voters (electors) (20). The use of recorded excerpts from the speech is especially effective, since the text printed in the Soviet press was heavily edited — both to make Khrushchev sound more literate and to tone down the aggressive and "I'm the boss" tone of his remarks (cf. Investigations, 2-2559).

-5-

MEASURE BROADCASTS: Most of these were good; I would single out the following for special commendation (as meeting all the standards of the Policy Manual, and being of direct interest and concern to Soviet listeners): Father Alexander's Sunday talks (1, 15). His distinction of two types of atheism, and his discussion of ritual without faith, is thoughtful and highly relevant to the lives and surroundings of Soviet young people. Also: the Weidle broadcasts (1, 3, 10, 15) which are sophisticated and stimulating, though a bit temperate on the 1st and 15th. His remarks on Pasternak (part of the Prenes round-table) (28) are excellent (this is also true of the other Prenes symposiasts).

Also: the Indian socialist Chandrahook on his visit to Communist China (28), translated from the New York Times story. (But note that a briefer excerpt was given in the foreign press round-up on the 9th, translated from an Indian publication; this is not referred to in the later broadcast.)

Also: Leopold on China and the USSR (2, 25); the discussion of revisionism (4) -- though this is a crucial subject, and deserves even fuller and deeper treatment. The Yugoslav justit on India (4, 5), especially the second part (5). English astronomer Lowell (6) good, but a bit naive about conditions of scientific work in the Soviet Union. -- Articles on Jazz (5, 23) are excellent, and if the musical examples were well chosen (as I assume they were) should have an enormous impact on younger Soviet listeners.

Bonhke on Aragon and "readers and reading" is excellent, although there is some overlap in his three Aragon scripts, which might have been avoided -- making the three parts of a single longer discussion. --The excerpts from Leopold Hainiger's piece on "three generations of the Soviet intelligentsia" are good, but all too brief. -- Articles on desegregation in Virginia (10, 25) excellent; also those on English sports (26); Frank on the "blue ridars" (or "blue horns"), a group of dissident young intellectuals in Kharkev, is excellent, especially the material on Kondrashov and expressionism. -- "Law and Freedom in India" (23) is very good, but the erroneous statement is made (twice) in introducing the article that India achieved independence 9 years ago (i.e. in 1950). In fact, it was 12 years ago (in 1947).

+ -

Also: the manifesto of (economic) liberalism (23); discussion of Soviet-Yugoslav policy (24); Mike Wallace talk (20 — lively and provocative. Also stories on the "atomic knife" (20) and German workers' libraries (20), and Savallain on the Soviet black market in books (21). -- Also "the dangerous Tolstoy" and Khrushchev as a new Stalin (both 17); living conditions of young German workers (19), Skator on Columbia exhibit of Russian MSS and books (19).

Also: "Why I left the Italian Communist Party" (7), the Moscow Art Theatre in Japan (8), "socialists answer Khrushchev" (13). A. McIntyre's discussion of Dr. Shiva, as an echo of young Marx's views of human alienation and "reification" is stimulating (13), but he is widely referred to as "well known." I know several dozen contemporary English philosophers, but I've never heard of McIntyre.

Also: the pieces on the Polish universities, their autonomy, etc. is excellent, as is the Red Leader reprint on Yugoslavia (both 16). The material on Lincoln (11, 13, 14) is very good, including Adlai Stevenson's article (14), <sup>but it is erroneously stated</sup> (13) that Lincoln was president during the 1870's.

Also: religion and French young people, and "two Berlins" (both 12) are very good, as is Grossman on China. (11).

I would make a few critical comments about the following feature scripts: David Darg's script on Soviet trade unions, though a solid piece, is too long and a bit dull (11). His piece on Czech writers is better. Denis de Rougemont (3) is not very impressive, and the theme of progress and leisure will be familiar to Soviet listeners from their own press and radio; the conception of Christianity as a culture-historical force, to be sure, will be less familiar. The Verelde discussion of "technical know-how" is interesting, though not very original; but the strictures on "technocracy" add nothing to what Bakunin said nearly a century ago (and this connection might have been made for Soviet listeners). The discussion of the Swiss pickets to (2) is adequate, but the quoted Swiss student's letter (about giving a woman your coat on the bus or letting her enter a room first) would be taken as a joke by Soviet young people, for whom such "bourgeois" customs have no meaning.

STUDENT BROADCASTS: generally good; student notebook on 23rd and 7th especially good. The stories about Norwegian-Soviet student exchanges and student architects' demonstrations in London (both 16) are excellent. Of course, students will be even more interested in the jazz broadcasts (see above).

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE: generally adequate, although en-lt. Kartashov's statements are occasionally too elusive (e.g., 6, 10, 27). He is better on Cartier and the signage of the Party line (3) and on Melnikov vs. Shulov (20). He is also good on the 13th. The military discussion of 6.

"large and small banks" is very good (3). But a serious error of judgment and taste was committed in the broadcast of Feb. 28th. One of the topics is "the best pilot in the world"; it turns out that the pilot in question is former Luftwaffe officer Erich Hartmann, while the second best pilot in the world is his comrade-in-arms Heinz Bärthorn. They are reported to have shot down 352 and 301 planes, respectively, on the Russian-German front during World War II. This seems a singularly inappropriate story to broadcast to present-day Soviet soldiers (especially drivers), men whose friends and comrades were among those killed. Furthermore, the figures for the top Soviet ace (62 kills) and top U.S. ace (10) seem paltry compared to the bag of these two Germans. But in fact the comparison is not so clearcut: German fighter planes/and gunights, at the beginning of the war (1939-1940) were far superior to anything the Russians had during this period. Hartmann's superiority was in considerable measure the result of better equipment; but nothing is said of this in the R. broadcast. Furthermore, the figures are given as though they were perfectly definite and certain: as an ex-Air Force officer, I know that this is far from the case. A great deal of guesswork and "probability" enters in, to say nothing of official exaggeration for propaganda purposes... In sum, this broadcast was a serious mistake; I hope it will not be repeated.

AMERICAN NOTEBOOK: Generally good; I would single out for special praise: "music while you work" (6), Brazilian tribes, Latin-American poetry, and Peruvian leadership (18). The American notebook for the 4th has an interesting account of public opinion research, and a good comparative study of three regions. But why should "Mexico City" be given in Russian in the English form (Mexiko city)? Similarly with Gorky City. It should either be given in Spanish, or translated into Russian. — The story of Mr. Trousdale starts interestingly, but ends with a kind of let-down (11).

9.

ENTERTAINMENT REPORTS: Generally good. The following are especially impressive: Report on Hungary and Albania (10) (but is it wise to use the term "Communist empire"?); Tugolev writers on China (17); Yugoslavia and the 21st Party Congress (16); Polish writers (3) (but on this same broadcast the comments on Bulgaria are wholly elusive); Jews emigrating from Eastern Europe to Israel (26); Church in Eastern Europe (24).

AFRICAN NEWSWORK: Generally very good, especially on the 2nd and 16th. I found the article on the diamond rush more interesting than the survey of African economics (2), but this may tell more about me than about the broadcast.

ACTION PICTURE REVIEWS: I liked the review of "Earth to Men" (based on Jules Verne) (10), and the North Africa Campaign picture ("Buster Potts") (24). But I am a bit concerned about the serious and detailed treatment of "The Buccaneer"; there would seem to be many American films of greater importance and artistic merit than this wide-screen battle spectacle. (Has "The Defiant Ones" been reviewed?) (yes)

REVIEWS, RADIO PLAYS: I was most impressed by "Young general" (P. Preobrazhensky); it is quite clever as satire, and hits home at Soviet bureaucracy and "officialdom." But it errs, I think, in poking listeners' viewpoint, of course): (1) the memory of Lenin, (2) Soviet achievements in science, technology, and exploration. It would have been better to use a bust of Stalin or Dzhugashvili and it would have been preferable not to hold Soviet Antarctic exploration up to ridicule.

15.

PROFILES, INTERVIEWS, OBITUARY NOTICES I found all of the profiles interesting and effective, especially those of the Peruvian statesman (16), Indira Gandhi (14), Macmillan (21), Willy Brandt (17 and 28), the Hungarian-born chemist, Kervany (27), and Ken Swayn (Interview) (28). The interview with Amu Mitra (7) is solid and important, but not too exciting. And I wonder whether so much attention should have been paid to DeGaulle (obituary, Feb. 3rd).

In conclusion, let me mention two lapses in Russian style both from the broadcast of February 24 (cf. Vystrelki II): "...otrosheniya ... ozhde bol'she uchoshchilis'" then etc. bylo ne "she" and a reference to articles published "nauchno-tekhnicheskimi" v takiye gazete i ponyazhcheniya nekotorye izny voprosy." Otherwise, so far as I can judge, the Russian style is good.

(signed) George L. Eline

submitted April 24, 1959